FINE FOOD IN THE FUG

Would you be happy to see a smoking ban in restaurants and bars ?

Clear the air

As a non-smoker, I would welcome people eating and smoking at my table if only their obnoxious tobacco fumes were extracted more powerfully from restaurants. The British seem incapable of installing air extraction systems which work satisfactorily.

David Meredith, Salisbury

The lost diners

I would certainly eat out more if smoking were banned in restaurants and other eating places. Over the years, it has been difficult to eat smoke-free, so we eat out less now.

We visited Ireland last May where they have banned smoking in all workplaces. It was a joy to go anywhere to eat without fear of being smoked out.

David Meredith is right when he says « The British seem incapable of installing air extraction systems which work satisfactorily. » (Debate, September 22)

I am sensitive to the smell of tobacco smoke (watering eyes, burning nose), but this month I went with a friend to the smoking lounges at the airports in St Louis and Newark in the US. The small room was full of smokers and I was surprised that the air was as clean and fresh as the outdoors.

I do not advocate diners in a restaurant being subjected to smoke. However, smoking tobacco is legal and I do not believe that smokers should be made pariahs. There should be more tolerance and accommodation.

Besides, I find the odours of food from the restaurant kitchen nearly as offensive as smoke and would like to see better ventilation in all public buildings.

Donna Lynde, Newark
