TURN IT OFF !

For one week in April 2004, millions of people chose not to watch TV for 'TV Turnoff Week'.

TV Turnoff Week started in 1995 and is more popular every year. Many participants discover that you can have a good time with the TV off. If that sounds crazy to you, just have a look at some statistics :

- An American teenager spends 900 hours per year at school ; the same teenager spends 1,023 hours per year watching TV. That's 2 hours 49 minutes per day.
- An average British person (not just teenagers) watches 3 hours 35 minutes per day.
- In the US, most TV is commercial, so it has adverts. American children see 20,000 adverts per year. By age 65, an American has seen two million ads !

But some research from Britain says that may not be a problem. The London Business School observed people during TV adverts and they discovered that people don't watch a lot of the ads. The researchers discovered that the most common activity during the adverts was talking to other people in the room. Many other viewers started reading or doing housework or changed channels during adverts. They only really watched them about 25 per cent of the time.

That's not surprising : British electricity companies know there's always a lot of electricity consumed during the adverts because people turn on their electric kettles to make cups of tea !

Average : moyen, moyenne, en moyenne
A kettle : une bouilloire
