Eat Your Greens

More and more Britons are becoming vegetarians. Studies say 5,000 people stop eating meat every week. If this continues, Britain will be totally vegetarian by 2035!

• Green Teens

Seven per cent of the British population is vegetarian, but 12% of 15-24-year-olds are. Restaurants and school canteens all offer vegetarian meals on their menus. We spoke to Elizabeth Anderson, 16, a vegetarian from London. She stopped eating meat when she was four because she hates the idea of killing animals for food. She says, "I think sheep, cows or chickens can feel pain like your family dog or cat. You wouldn't send your pet to the abattoir, would you?"

She thinks that soon it will be so common to be vegetarian that no one will ask about it: "I'm vegetarian, it's normal, it's not a strange thing anymore, it's not like I'm from Mars or something like that. I'm a normal person I just don't eat animals."

Taken from Easy Going N°4 2001

Why do people stop eating meat? Forty-four per cent say that it's for moral reasons – they think it's wrong to kill animals, they don't like modern industrial farming, or they think vegetarianism is a better use of the world's food resources. Twenty-two per cent say vegetarian food is better for your health, and recent food scandals with mad cow disease, salmonella and dioxins are encouraging more people to become vegetarians.

Eating Greens is Green!

It takes 10 kilos of vegetables and grain to produce one kilo of meat. So, if everyone was vegetarian, it would probably be easier to feed everyone in the world, and we wouldn't need to cut down forests for agricultural land to feed animals. Cutting down forests contributes to the greenhouse effect and so does all the methane gas farm animals produce.
