Snowboarding

The cool winter sport

1).....
A snowboarder's head should always be turned in the direction he is going.

6).....
Glasses are vital because they protect from the snow, the wind and dangerous ultra violet rays.

2).....
A snowboarder's arms should be held out from the body and be in line with it. This helps with balance.

3).....
Snowboarders keep the body straight and in line with their feet. They control direction by using their hips, legs and arms.

5).....
Snowboarders flex their knees and ankles so that they can change positions quickly and absorb shocks when jumping.

4).....
Beginners or acrobatic snowboarders usually wear soft boots, for easy ankle movement. Hard shoes are used by snowboard racers because they give better support at high speeds.

The snowboard

The tip of the board is called the "nose". It is curved up to make the board slide easily on the snow. The middle or "waist" is the narrowest part of the board. The back edge is called the "tail". The board's edges are made of metal which bites into the snow or ice, and makes it easier to steer the board and control its speed.

A few facts about snowboarding

In the 1960s, Californians decided to bring two of their summer sports to the snow : surfing and skateboarding. Tom Sims and Sherm Poppen were the first to produce snowboards or "snurfers" ("snow surfers").

These were made of wood and had a rope attached to the tip to turn them. Snowboards are now a lot more sophisticated.

In the late 1970s, snowboarding arrived in Europe, but many ski resorts banned the sport. They said it ruined the pistes and that snowboarders were young, dangerous and irresponsible. Things have changed. Today, snowboarding is one of the world's fastest-growing sports.
